

Monitoring Program

The World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA), in consultation with key stakeholders, developed a monitoring program regarding substances which are not on the Prohibited List, but, WADA wants to monitor in order to establish and deter patterns of misuse in sport.

The substances on the monitoring list are published, prior to any testing.

Upon release of the monitoring list all laboratories will periodically report to WADA all instances of detected presence and reported use as a cumulative total by sport. The laboratories will also report whether the samples were collected in or out of competition. The reports made to WADA do not contain any additional information regarding the samples.

WADA shares the data received by the laboratories with International Federations and National Anti-Doping Organizations. WADA ensures strict anonymity of individual athletes and the reported use or detected presence of a monitored substance do not constitute an anti-doping rule violation.
